NICOSIA, Cyprus (UPI)

— An estimated 4,500 shots were fired Saturday as Greek and Turkish Cyprists fought a battle east of the strategic Nicosia - Kyrenia Road but there were no casualties.

Another incident occurred west of Kyronia when Greek Cypriots stupped a unit of Canadian Jeeps. However, they were later allowed to pass unsearched.

The premier told a crowd of 10,000 at the outdoor Kitsilano Showboat the birthday bond-burning was "another little fire of progress."

The last one, at Kelowna in 1959, required some outside RCMP assistance when the premier fired a flaming arrow but failed to set the bonds

LBJ Softens Opposition With Special Persuasion

Many have pictured the President as simply a thrust-ing, all-demanding, political "operator" constantly twisting the arms, slapping the backs and befuddling the minds of his vis-a-vis.

This interpretation substitutes hard-used stereotypes for competence to describe adequately a complex and subtle procedure. # Canadian Soldier Killed NICOSIA, Cyprus (UPI) — A Canadian UN soldier was killed and another injured Saturday when their Royal Dragoon irmored car hit a soft shoulder and overturned close to Kyr enia. (In Ottawa, army headquarters said the dead soldier was trooper J. H. Campbell, New Waterford, N.S., of the Royal Canadian Dragoons.

The other Canadian was in-

The Birch Smirch

DOSSIBLY BECAUSE the Republican Presidential nomination convention avoided naming the John Birch Society as a subversive or extremist organization as proposed by the New York delegation, the society's leader, Mr. Robert Welch, has assumed that Birchism is a saleable commodity on the American political

This may be so. But if it is, it is up to the American electorate to decide upon its values without outside interference. However, loath as most Canadians will be to butt into American domestic affairs, citizens of this country must protest the attempts of the Birchest leader to blacken the names of Canada's two leading statesmen.

In a recent article in the Birch Society's monthly magazine, "American Opinion," Mr. Welch accuses both Prime Minister Pearson and Opposition Leader Diefenbaker of being active Communist stooges.

Of Mr. Diefenbaker, he says this: "... the Conservative Party under the leadership of Mr. John Diefenbaker, proceeded to betray itself, its principles, and its constituents as thoroughly as did the Republican Party under Eisenhower.

"Whatever the reason, Diefenbaker began to cater to Canada's domestic enemies.

"He proposed and had enacted a potentially dangerous 'bill of rights', dangerously weakened the restrictions on immigration, flatly refused to perform the duties of his office lest he inconvenience a Communist-dominated labor union engaged in Communistinspired violence, prevented the exposure of Communists in the CBC (which is owned by the federal government) and stifled attempts to inquire into treason

Mr. Welch then turns his guns on Mr. Pearson. "Power in Canada," he writes, "reverted last year to the Liberal Party, headed by Lester B. Pearson, who is best remembered in the United States for his attempt, while foreign minister in 1957, to further the purposes of the Communist Conspiracy by making an international incident out of the death of a Canadian diplomat and international criminal named E. Herbert

"Mr. Pearson (had been informed) that Norman was a Communist agent, and had thereafter appointed him to diplomatic posts in Washington, Tokyo, New Zealand, and elsewhere in which Norman served as a Soviet spy . . .

"But Pearson's impudent claims that dear Herbert was just an 'idealist' who, although innocent as Mary's little lamb, had committed suicide because his nerves were upset by the investigation conducted by wicked witch-hunters in the United States Senate, and his even more impudent attempt to use this prepos-terous story to incite hatred of the United States in Canada, were efforts that could not be made by a man of even moderately good judgment."

To this and considerably more of the same, Mr. Welch adds his "Scoreboard" which purports to show the extent of Communist control over some 38 differ-

The "Scoreboard" shows Canada as being 50 to 70 per cent under Communist control in 1964. In 1958 Canada is shown as only being 20 to 40 per cent under Red domination.

It also lists Australia as being 40 per cent under Communist control; Britain, 70 per cent; the United States, 70 per cent; West Germany, 60 per cent; Israel, 70 per cent; India, 80 per cent, and France, 80 per cent.

Obviously Mr. Welch and his cohorts are now ready to take on the world as the great defenders against the "Communist Conspiracy."

However, if he believes his own twisted and nonsensical drivel surely he must be persuaded that he and his society have nothing left to defend. If he does not accept this then he does not place any credence in his own findings.

Meanwhile the majority of Canadians would be grateful to him if he restricted his footling to his own padded backyard.

Gambia Gambado

TT HAS BEEN announced from London that the British Colony and Protectorate of Gambia will be granted its independence on February 18, 1965.

Gambia, apart from being the last territory re-maining under British colonial rule in West Africa, also has the distinction of being one of the oldest and certainly the smallest of all British African possessions. It consists of the island of St. Mary, situated at the mouth of the Gambia River, which flows through the Senegal Republic, and a 10-mile-wide strip of land on each side of the river. In all, it possesses a total of 4,005 square miles and a population of slightly more

It is predictable that on achieving its independence early next year it will elect to remain in the Commonwealth so that it will have an equal say with all other Commonwealth governments on future policies and developments within the Commonwealth.

It is also predictable that it will be granted full membership in the United Nations wherein it will be entitled to a vote in the General Assembly equal to that of, say, India, Russia or the United States.

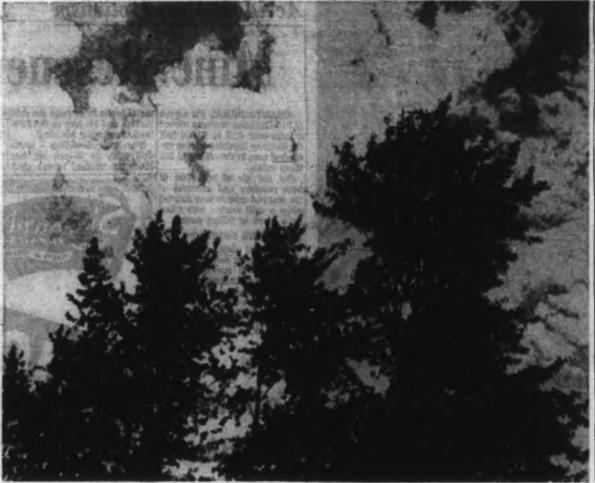

Not bad for a little guy.

Endearment

MR. DIEFENBAKER: I do not want to get into a controversy with the hon, gentleman on woolliness, especially after the budget he produced. I ask him, when did his woolly idea of levelling up to the top province change to a basis of levelling to the two

Mr. Gordon: First of all I should like to say, as an old sheep farmer, that when I said "woolly" I did not in any offensive way. It is a term of endearment amongst those who are in this business.

B.C. Translates Vision

British Columbia has its own vision of the north. And instead of just talking about it, which was John Diefenbaker's failing, there's plenty of action in the norththis province to back up the fine-sounding phrases.

centre of much of this activity, the Peace River dam, was visited last week by a group of government and business leaders who saw the premier push a button to start a giant

There were 135 names on the guest list. Apart from a few newsmen and B.C. Hydro officials the names comprised a who's who of business in this province and there were others from Toronto, Montreal, Britain, France and Japan In the party were some who had scoffed out loud when the government announced its giant two-river public power scheme and many others who doubted whether it could ever be successfully carried out. After all, B.C. with a population of 1,700,000 has emupon a $700,000,000 project. Canada, with its been diverted and a mountain is literally being moved piecemeal some four miles by conveyor to create the earth-fill dam, could scarcely fail to be impressed.

Dr. Gordon Shrum, the retired university professor who became chairman of B.C. Hydro, put the stamp of financial respectability on the whole affair by casually mentioning that after 2% years the project was on schedule and costs were running $60,000,000 below estimates.

Premier Bennett, in a rare outburst of modesty, said he was really "only the office boy" for Crown corporations such as the Hydro and Pacific Great Eastern Railway, which are sparking the northern development. He went on to predict that the northern section of the province, as the result of this development, would become he most prosperous area in North America, pumping new wealth into the commercial centres in the south.

Prince George, fastest growing centre in the province with two new pulp mills and other new industry going up, would soon be larger than Edmonton, the premier said.

Dr. Shrum, who is a realist in his approach to such matters, wasn't willing to settle for a comparison with

He has just returned from a visit to Russia and said in that country people regard Moscow as a southern city, yet the metropolis of 6,000,000 is on the same latitude as Hudson Hope, the tiny settlement 15 miles from the damsite.

Leningrad, farther north, is on the same latitude as Fort St. John. There's no reason, Dr. Shrum said, why we should not have cities of this magnitude in northern B.C. and indeed

South Deserting Johnson?

Goldwater Closes Gap

Conversations with members of Congress and political leaders in Washington in both parties reveal a new.assessment of Barry Goldwater's

The general attitude is quite different than a couple of months ago when Democrats, particularly, thought Goldwater's nomination for president would be a political wind-

The chief factor in this new assessment is that Senator Goldwater may have the strength in the south it was thought he would have when President Kennedy was alive.

Some southern senators are beginning to develop a sudden detach-ment from the Johnson campaign and political conditions are tending to revert to what they were when John F. Kennedy considered how he would be re-elected against Barry Goldwater as his prospective oppo-

Kennedy knew that he would probably carry the northeast. But if he were to face further losses in the south then he would have to run strong in the midwest and west to counteract the southern weakness. This was the rub.

Kennedy had not been strong in the midwest in 1960. He had lost Wisconsin, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Ohio. In the west, he had lost

California. In the south, Kennedy lost Florida, Oklahoma, Tennessee and Virginia. Mississippi's eight unpledged electors were not counted for Kennedy, nor were six of 11 Alabama's unpledged electors. So in effect, Kennedy lost

5% southern states. There are some additional rumblings now which call into question whether President Johnson will carry North Carolina, South Carolina and even Georgia, which has always gone Democratic. It is even reported some observers that there may be some reason to question how Texas will vote, although this seems incredible under the circumstances.

# # TI it is so that Johnson's position in the south vs. Goldwater is about the same as Kennedy's position vs. Goldwater, then the midwest and the west take on added-significance in the 1964 election.

It was no wonder that when the Democratic Governor of Iowa, Harold E. Hughes, came to Washington with his family recently President Johnson had all the Hughes stay at the White House overnight after attendmaking quite a fuss over a popular governor in a state with less than one-fourth the electoral votes of New

It was equally understandable that the Democratic national committee should distribute a poll showing that President Johnson leads in Kansas. and that Governor Morrison of Nebraska and Governor Breathitt of Kentucky should also get the White House overnight treatment.

Some of these politicians formed the very distinct impression that Johnson thought midwestern states with small electoral votes might be in a swing position in a close election, particularly if the "white backwere to be strong in such states as Ohio and Illinois.

Under these circumstances, it would not be surprising, either, if President Johnson should give more than passing consideration to Gov. Edmund G. (Pat) Brown of California, a Catholic, for the vicepresidential nomination.

All this merely contributes to the more general impression that the presidential election of 1964 has taken on a new dimension with the outcome not so easily forseen as a couple of months ago

Doctor Probes Reincarnation Evidence

NEW DELHI (Regiers)-At a little known university in north India, a young doctor is trying to prove-or disprove-the theory

Dr. H. N. Banerjee, director of the department of parapsychology at the University of Rajasthan, has devoted several years to seeking a scientific explanation of those rare cases in which people have shown astounding ability to recall details of

He has yet to find a rational explanation for this phenomenon. But he has collected a mass of material. He is now conducting a census of international instances of claimed reincarnation. He has visited several foreign lands to investigate reports of the existence of persons claiming the ability to recall intimate details of past lives. About 200 such cases are being studied by the Rasjathan university's department of parapsychology.

One such case; investigated in 1950, involved a 10-year-old girl, named Swarna Lata, of Chhatarpur, a town in central India.

The girl belonged to a middle class family and her father was Australia the district inspector of schools. From early childhood. Swarna Lata claimed that her real home was at Katni, a town several miles away, and that she had two sons. She described the appearance of the house with remarkable accuracy-as it had been 18 years previously.

CLAIM VALID

One early case investigated was in Delhi in 1936. A 10-yearold girl, named Shanti Devi, claimed that she was a wife and mother and had lived in Mathura, a town about 75 miles south of Delhi.

Her claim aroused countrywide interest. A 15-man committee headed by a leading publin figure investigated and decided that the girl's claim was Shanti Devi was taken to Mathura. The girl took the parts straight to the house of her "husband." She demonstrated complete familiarity with the house and took the investigating team to her bedroom to show them the place where she had buried her money.

RECOVERED

An empty box was recovered from the spot, but her "husband," Chaubey, explained that he had removed the money.

The investigating team found that Chaubey's wife had died Oct. 24, 1925.

Shanti Devi was born Dec. 11, 1926. Shanti Devi still lives in Delhi. She never married and leads an austere religious life.

Beatles' First Film Surprisingly Good

By BOB THOMAS
HOLLYWOOD (AP)—A Hard Day's Night, starring the Beatles, may well be the surprise film of the year. The surprise is that it is good.

The film shows that the unshorn quartet may be with us for a long time to come, not as freaks but as qualified entertainers.

Producer Walter Shenson and writer Alun Owen Wisely chose to forgo any semblance of a plot. And they portray John, Paul, George and Ringo as what they are:

What impels the flimsy craft along is the introduction of the character of Paul's grandfather, an overage rake played with delicate skill by Wilfrid Brambell. His mischief-making adds to the travails suffered by the Beatles at the hands of their fanatical fans.

The movie opens with a mad scramble by the foursome to escape their following and board a train. It ends with a television performance which pours forth enough of their twangy chantings to satisfy any Beatlemaniac. In between, the banter flies at a rapid clip.

The comedy follows the pattern of vintage Marx Brothers or early Three Stooges, though not as hilarious as either. But then, the Beatles are new at it...

All four register as personalities. Ringo Starr is an ideal target for abuse because of his nose and height. Paul McCartney is puckish and refreshing, and John Lennon and George Harrison do well in the more-or less

VICTORIA MAPLE LEAFS will play 16 games against Vancouver Canucks this season, only 12 against ben Fran-cisco Scali and 14 against the other three clubs in a schedule that's just slightly unbalanced. With the Seals likely to be tougher than the Canucks it could mean an important edge... Bruce and Brian Mackensia, the Victoria brother combination signed by New York Yankees, got off to that nervous start with Johnston City in the all-rookie Appalachian Langue. Bruce gave up five hits and eight bases on balls, good for six runs, in pitching until one was out in the fourth inning while Brian, his battery-mate, was hitless in two swings . . . Mark Trueman, who played a big part in the early days of the Victoria Curling Club, is ill in hospital and I speak for all curiers in wishing him the best . . . Art Worth, it is reported, boated himself a huge cod, about 60 pounds, which grabbed and refused to yield a small cod which had taken Art's salmon offering Why not the Eastern Conference as well asked a Jan who noted that the guess here was Calgary, B.C. Lions, Winnipeg, Saskatchewan and Edmonton, in that order, in the Western Football Conference. The guess is Hamilton, Ottawa, Toranto and Montreal with the Grey Cup game between Hamilton and either the Lions or Stampeder About two more seasons, one reads, will see a playoff between the champions of the National and American Foothall Leagues . . . Almost unbelievably, team statistics in the latest issue of The Sporting News show San Francisco finanta have the most-effective pitching staff in major league baseball with a 2.82 carned-run average . . .

VANCOUVER CANUCKS, who could end up with Rudy Migay, with Denver Invadors last season, as playing coach, are hoping to get back defencemen Larry Cahan. The old intimidator has been with New York Rangers for the past three seasons . . . Post-game television on video tape of the home games of the B.C. Liens, starting three hours after game time, could affect attendance at the live, closed circuit theatre television . . . For fans who like both their hockey and football, the Maple Leafs and Lions are scheduled at home the same night only once, on Oct. 24, when Canucks play at Memorial Arena and Saskatchewan meets the Lions at Empire Stadium ... Portland Buckarous, who-figure to be the team to beat in the Western Hockey League this sesson, reached that status by adding a new line of ex-Victoria Cougars. Joining Andy Hobento and Larry Leach will be Bob Beckett, who played 16 games here in the 1956-57 season . . . Larry Zeidel, veteran basher who played defence for Seattle Toloma last season, is said to have heparitis and may not be able to play this season . . . 13-year-old Roger Skillings looks more and more like the best tennis prospect to be produced in Victoria for some time. He's the class in these parts in the under-14 age group and has been winning often enough in the under-16 group to indicate strongly he'll step up a class quite handily next year . . . No player announcements have been made regarding Victoria Maple Loafs but Al Millar can be expected to do their goaling, and that should mean hockey's most important position will be well looked after . . . Lovell Coleman of Calgary Stampeders looms as the all-star fullback this season in the Western Football Conference and perhaps, in Canada, but he may get a good argument from George Reed of Sankatchewan Roughriders. standout rookie last season who has put on extra weight.

JACK BIONDA, still wearing a special support for his injured back, is holidaying in Ontario and it's still uncertain whether or not he will be able to take part in the Inter-City Lacrose League playdowns . . . Denial of the report of friction between the senior and junior Victoria Shamrocks was no more than an ill-advised-try to cover it up. It had been simmering all year, it did erupt in the senior dressing room after last Wednesday's game and things are not yet too amicable in all quarters . . . With a Canadian junior lacrosse final appearing more and more unlikely it behooves everyone concerned to at least make every effort to take up the offer made by Jack Morgan, manager of Memorial Arena. He has offered to underwrite the Minta Cup playoff if Victoria Shamrocks win the Western chamhip and if the Canadian final can be completed before Sept. 14, when he has to start getting an ice surface ready for Victoria Maple Leafs, scheduled to open their training camp on Sept. 15 . . . Punch Imlach says that Stan Mikita, centreman for Chicago Black Hawks, is the best player in the National Hockey League and believes he may seriously challenge the scoring records set by Gordie Howe, Mikita, only 24 last May, has 122 goals and 200 assists. But Howe had 160 goals and 183 assists at the same age and Mikita ich has H we still among the best after 18 seasons ... Defenceman Mare Beaume, back with the Toronto Maple Leaf organization after being traded for Red Kelly, is apparently set as the playing-coach of the Toronto-sponsored Tulsa entry in the Central Prefessional Hockey League . . . Lowell Hodges, who now calls Colorado Springs home, is renewing old acquaintances on a holiday trip . . . John Davis, kid brother of Nanaimo's top scorer, is leading the Ontario junior lacrosse league in scoring. At last reports, he had 71 goals for his first 19 games and while transfers are expensive, he would be quite an addition for any Inter-City Lacrosse League club.

Apartment Life Attracts Elderly

By IAN ARBOL

Victoria, traditionally a city of homes and gardens, is becoming more and more a city of apartment dwellers. The rate of occupancy here is higher than in many of the large cities in the rest of Canada, according to real estate and insurance

But what about some of the new luxury apartments that have only a small number

"We anticipated occupancy would take some time," say the agents for such buildings. They point to older luxury apartment houses which are now virtually filled.

According to the latest survey of one insurance company, which is responsible for much of the construction in Victoria, the percentage of overall apartment vacancies in the city is 5.2 per cent. "This is a healthy situation," said a spokesman. The Colonist asked several tenants in the new apartments, who formerly had homes

Second Plate Found

Another old enamel-on-steel licence plate with the seal of the city of Victoria, and no date other than the city's incorporation of 1862 on it, has been reported to The Daily Colonist.

parted to The

This one is in the possession of Joe Howroyd, 1641 Mortimer. He uncovered it while plowing "15 or 18 years ago" at his Gordon Head farm, now the Howroyd Subdivision.

The licence plate is identical in material and size to one uncovered by George Gorse, 1438 Brooke, while he was digging in his backyard 14 years ago. NO INFORMATION

Neither the city hall nor the Motor Vehicle Branch could give any information on the plates when they were shown to them Thursday by Teddy Gorse, 11, and friend David Harris, 10.

One of the people at city hall thought the licence might have been used for a horse and buggy transfer firm.

LARGE NUMBERS

Whereas the Gorse plate has large numbers 39 on the face, the Howroyd plate reads 98.

Mr. Howroyd has no idea of the history of h is plate. His copy is nailed on the hanger at the Butler-Howroyd Air Strip. And no one who has seen it has volunteered my information.

By IAN SMITH

What's grey and is 7,700 miles through the middle Some kind of elephant joke?

No, sir; as any member of the Victoria Astronomical Society will tell you in a flash, the answer is the planet Venus.

This and other questions of astronomical importance will be answered in a series of lectures staged by the society each Monday throughout August,

The first one is set for tomorrow night at 8:30 p.m., in Room 210 of the Young Building at the Victoria University Lansdowne campus,  $I_{\rm B}$  it Dr. S. C. Morris will speak on The Solar System.

Rain Causes Balling

By M. V. CHESNUT, FRES

BOSE BALLING (K.B. Victoria) The rose buds you sent are suffering from a physiological disorder known as "balling." The browning and decay of the petals is typical of the trouble. As it is not caused by discuse or pests, spraying will not help, and about all you can do is remove the terminal bud and allow the side buds to de-

Excessive rain, which causes the petals to stick together, is believed to be the main cause of balling.

THIRSTY HOLLYHOCKS (A.G.S., Maple Bay)—I suspect the wilting of your hollyhocks is due to overly dry soil. Because the leaves of this plant are large, even heavy rain will often fail to reach the roots, and this is complicated even further by our habit of growing hollyhocks against a wall or fence—positions which are notoriously difficult to keep moistened. Give the plants an occasional deep soaking around the stems.

BL0880M-DR0PPING CICUMBER (E.H., Victoria) cucumber vine carries two different kinds of blossoms in its leaf axits, male and female. Female flowers can be distinguished by a swelling immeembyro cucumber; male blossoms have no such swellings, as their function is purely to provide pollen for the fertilizing of the female blooms. Nature provides seven or eight times as many male blossoms as there are females, and as only the females are capable of making fruit, this can cause the impression that the vines are not cropping well.

A shortage of pollinating insects through indiscreet spraying may cause female blossoms to abort; ants are particularly valuable pollinators and should be encouraged. You can pollinate by hand, tickling the centre parts of a female blossom with the centre parts of a male bloom, or you can spray with a tomato-setting hormone apray, which will stimulate the female blossoms to swell their fruits. even though there may be few or no seeds in them.

There is a hybrid pickling cu-cumber called Sparton Dawn on which all or almost all the blossoms are female. This one will sometimes fail to swell its fruits because there are no male blossoms to provide pol-len: Sparton Dawn should always have another variety of cucumber planted nearby,

PRINCE OF WALES FEATHER (N.McL., Duncan) The plant you know as Prince of Wales' Feather is Feather Hyacinth - actually Muscari comosum monstrosum. The about three inches deep and four inches apart. This muscari flourishes in most types of soil but has some preference for a rather gritty, preference for a rather gritty, open-textured soil enriched with old rotted manure. The site should be sunny. Propagation is by small offset bulbs which can be detached at planting

SYSTEMIC INSECTICIDE (G.J., Sidney - A systemic insecticide in one which enters into the plant's system and is absorbed into the sam stream and conveyed to all parts of the plant, rendering it poisonous to all insects that feed upon it.

There are two obvious advantages: The poison works from the inside, therefore cannot be washed off by rain, and because only the insects which eat the leaves or suck the sap are affected, the predator insects are unharmed. The residual effect is uncertain, though, so systemics should not be used on food crops until more is known as to how long the poison persists within the plant.

Sophia to Play Marilyn

Monroe in the movie version of After the Fall for a most unusual reason. It's because she does not resemble the late blonde sex goddess in the remotest way. "Arthur Miller wanted me to play the part for that very reason, Sophia told me. Miller has always insisted that his play had nothing to do with his former wife, which of course is absurd because everything about the girl, played by burn Loden on stage, is about the tragic Miss Monroe. But I see his point. With the brunette Sophia playing the part in the film, it has to be all about a different girl.

Paul Newman plays the role Jason Robards Jr. had on stage and he too is different, nothing like Miller . . . Fred Zinnemann will be directing . . . But first Sophia will be making Judith in Israel. In fact she was packing for Haifa when I had tea with her in the faded stone Colonna Palace where she and Carlo Ponti have their apartment, above his offices.

"We will move into our new home about 20 miles from Rome when I come back from Israel," continued beautiful Neopolitan actress. It is a magnificent $2,000,000 estate.

Sophia brought up the question of her marital status with Ponti. "It's the same. In Italy I am not married to him, but there will never ever be another man in my life. So we go on, hoping for an annulment. I like to think that will happen one day. I am an Italian and I want to live in Italy. If it never does happen, then we will have to consider something else." They have a residence in Switzerland and could become citizens of that country, marry there and raise the family she wants so much. Actually Sophia considers herself married to Ponti who discovered her for her film career.

"It was good that I was so poor when I started." said Sophia. "It is hard to work when you don't have to, and I have worked very hard because I had strength within me. My sister sings very well and she is a good actress but she did not have the same compulsion to succeed because I was able to look after her. It has been unfortunate that I gave everything to her." Her sister is married to Mussolini's son Romano. They have a baby to whom Sophia is deeply devoted. She would like nothing better than to have a child of her own.

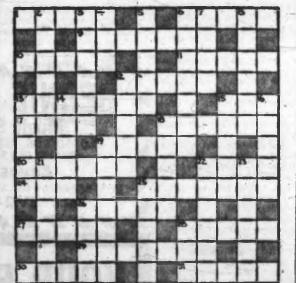

"Did you ever recover the jewels that were stolen from you in England?" I wanted to know, it happened while she starred in The Millionairess, "Never," said Sophia. "They were not insured. I was going to. They were stolen in the morning and I was planning to insure them that same afternoon. I was heartbroken."

Answer in Tuesday's Colonist

Both sides are great at spreading rumors about the enemy and using any possible tactic to destroy the other. a staune presidential election year, claims he wins hundreds of votes for his side by a very simple manoeuvre. "Everytime I take a taxi I tip the driver five cents and say,

'Vote Republican!' Another Democratic friend now spends his spere time driving around Washington, cutting off people, honking his horn at them, and stealing their parking places. He does this in a car that has "Goldwater for President" stickers all over it.

"I don't know if I'm accomplishing much now." he told us, "but I think I'll pick up most of my votes in late October.10

A Republican friend has a gimmick that he says works miracles. He picks people's names out of the phone book and calls them up at midnight and says, "I'm a volunteer for Johnson. Would you have a few minutes to talk to me?"

A Republican acquaintance claims he won many votes for Nixon in 1960 by scattering Democratic cumpaign literature on his neighbors' lawns. He hopes to do it again for Goldwater this year.

A Democrat we know says his mother, who has never been active in politics before, is so upset about Sen. Goldwater's nomination that she is working day and night for his defeat.

"What does she do?" we asked.

"She walks around in old tennis shoes with a Goldwater button on her chest, insulting everybody."

"That's not bad. But what have you been doing?" "Not much so far," he admitted. "My only contribution is that every time I go to a party I put on a Gold-water button and start making passes at all the independ-

He told us, "It's going to be a very tough fight. We have a woman neighbor, a Goldwater supporter, who calls up doctors and dentists and asks them if they have any new information of President Johnson's plan for socialized medicine

As the campaign gets hotter, psychological political warfare will be used more and more to attract the undecided vote.

While most people abhor this type of campaigning, specialist in psychological political planning told us, Extremism in the pursuit of voters is no vice.

Visitor Surveys His Work

The man who played a major role in establishing Victoria's Visitors' Bureau was back in town Saturday-as a tourist.

Louis Michelin was president of the Victoria Rotary Club that put she tourist bureau on the man for Victoria.

SEES FOR SELF

Now he can see for himself how the bureau has in turn put Victoria on the map in the eyes of tourists.

A resident of Philadelphia, Mr. Michelin said; "Back home they know where Victoria is, but they've never heard of Vancouver. I guess that's a sign that the bureau's fulfilling its role."

CAME HERE AT 11

London - born Mr. Michelin came to Vancouver Island at the of 11 when his family moved out to Cowichan.

Before he left Victoria, in 1952. he was manager of Plimley's Automobile Company.

"AMAZED, DELIGHTED" For a while he was managing director of the Austin Motor Company of Canada in Vancouver. After that he left for Philadelphia.

"I was astounded, amazed and delighted to see the fantastic growth of Victoria since I left." he-said. "The change I see is wonder-

ONE-MONTH HOLIDAY Mr. Michelin and his wife, Ruth, are on a one-month hollday across Canada and called in Victoria to look up old friends and relatives.

Saturday afternoon he went to the tourist bureau on the Causeway-it cost the Rotary Club $22,500 to build - and looked at the plague he unveiled on the outside wall.

It is dated May 9, 1949. Mr. girls who give help to tourists who visit the bureau.

"I wish I could stay much longer," he said as he admired the hanging baskets on The Causeway outside.

Chinese Blast Soon?

LONDON (UPI) - Diplomatic reports said Saturday Red China may be able to set off some kind of a nuclear explosion for prestige purposes later

The reports said Peking scientists, although they have not vet been able to produce anything resembling a real atomic bomb, appear to be rushing work on some sort of a primitive "nuclear device."

They said a test may be held before the end of the year to boost Red China's prestige as a coming nuclear power.

Peking itself is maintaining official silence on the subject. No detailed information is available here on the type of the device and the likely date of its explosion, and Moscow appears to have as little authoritative information about Red China's nuclear progress as the

Astronomical Lectures

Start This Monday

Picture of Outer Space

By IAN SMITH

What's grey and is 7,700 miles through the middle?

Some kind of elephant joke? No, sir; as any member of the Victoria Astronomical Society will tell you in a flash, the answer is the planet Venus.

This and other questions of astro-nomical importance will be answered in a series of lectures staged by the society each Monday throughout August.

The first one is set for tomorrow night at 8:30 p.m., in Room 210 of the Young Building at the Victoria University Lansdowne campus. In it Dr. S. C. Morris will speak on The Solar System,

His lecture will kick off a series that will eventually deal with the entire universe. The lectures will presume no prior knowledge on the part of the audience, and thus any member of the public is welcome to atthese talks," said E. K. Lee, chairman of the program. "High school students, housewives, grandfathers . . . anybody at all is welcome, and I think they'll find them interesting." who see the group expand.

The talks will all be given by members of the Dominion Astrophysical Observatory staff, and will be Illustrated. Other topics include the galactic system (by Dr. A. H. Batten), the atmospheres of the planets (by Dr. E. H. Richardson) and the universe of galaxies (by Dr. G. J. Odgers, who is president of the Victoria group). As can be seen by the titles, when the series is finished the audience should have a pretty fair idea of the wide open spaces out there. Cost of the whole series in $1,. and included will be a trip to the observatory at which equipment that the public rarely sees will be un-There's a catch, of course.

"We hope that the people who go to the lectures will become so interested that they'll join our society,'

It's not that the society is struggling-they already have about 80 members but Mr. Lee would like * * *

"It's an interesting hobby," he said, "and you can really become absorbed in it. Amateur astronomers can make significant contributions, by doing work that the professionals simply haven't time for

For instance, there's something called the American Association of Variable Star Observers. The members of this group peer intently at variable stars (which increase and diminish in brightness over periods of hours or years) and send their findings in to a centre where they are catalogued for reference by

But for those who are less altruistic, there are more personal possibilities in astronomy.

The Parish Churches Of Old England

When Will Shakespeare used the expression, "clear as the way to parish church," he knew, as usual, what he was talking about.

There is no more notable feature of the English countryside. Particularly in the smaller villages, the appearance of the parish church is always prepossessing; sometimes dominating.

England has 16,630 parishes—more or less-and, at their focal points, more than a lifetime of interest for antiquarians. architects, historians, artists, sculptors, stonemasons, companologists, sociologists and others besides. The interior appointments alone, such as fonts, screens, wall paintings, benches, pews, misericordes, lecterns, pulpits and memorials, are all wealthy, each with its own particular lore. If, for example, you are interested -as, no doubt, the original builders were -in how roofs and ceilings are to be prevented from flying off or, alternately, collapsing, the parish churches can show you all such schemes as the "hammer beam" --- to my nothing of the "double hammer beam"-the "scissor beam" and the "king" or "queen post," the "truss rafter," the "groined vault," the "rib and panel" and the exquisite "fan vaulting." Of this last we noted a superbly delicate instance at Bath Abbey.

Likewise, you will find a great profusion of embellishing motifs: in styles, Norman, Early English, decorated, perpendicular: in pattern, "billet," "chevron," "cable," "dog tooth," "tablet" or "ball flower," "benk head" and many others.

Windows, too, are vastly interesting: their shapes, sizes, positions, and, in particular, the stained glass used in their construction.

Step outside the shurch and look up at the tower. Towers range in height from about 50 feet to 300. Spires are simply the development of the early roof put on top of the tower. You will find in England Anglo-Saxon, Norman, Early English, perpendicular, transitional and decorated towers; towers located at the west end of the church, above the crossing of the nave and transept or completely detached from the church itself. There are aquare towers and round towers; stone, flint and wooden towers; half-timbered and shingled towers; very plain and very fancy towers.

Glance but briefly at the accompanying pictures and some idea will result of the almost unbelievable differences in the appearance and size of English parish churches. Think, then, of the huge variety that could—and does!—He between these extremes.

There seems to be little or no argument as to the fact that St. Botolph's, the parish church of Boston in Lincolnshire, is the largest of all. This has not always been so, even in mirly recent times. Yarmouth Parish Church of St. Nicholas held the distinction until 1912 when it was destroyed by bombs.

The length of St. Botolph's (282½ feet) is greater than that of some Cathedrals such as Carlisle (225), Bath (230) and Oxford (181). In width (100) it is less assuming but in height (68) it exceeds Brisotl (52), Chichester (61), Hereford (64), Lichfield (57), Oxford (44), Rochester and Southwark both (55) and Southwell (50).

However, it is the tower of the Boston Church that forms its crowning gloxy. The ceiling within affords headroom aplenty: it is 137 feet above the floor. The tower itself soars upwards for 272 feet, the Vestey Tower at the new Liverpool Cathedral (331), the Cross and Dome of St. Paul's Cathedral (365) and the spires of Salisbury (401), Norwich (320) and Chichester Cathedrals (277) alone exceeding it.

Smallest of Them All

As regards England's smallest parish church, there are what might be called rival claims or, at least, legal quibbles.

The tiniest complete church in use is that at Cultone on Exmoor in north Devon. One authority gives its measurements as 35x12 feet or 420 square feet in area; another states 33x1278" width, according to my shaky arithmetic, is 418 square feet.

Either way it accommodates a sitting congregation of 16. There is no road to it; just a 30 to 40-minute walk along a footpath from Periock Weir. Neverthelms, it is entrancing to visualize the overflow congregation assembled in the churchyard and the sidesmen darting in and out of the door and flitting hither and you among the tombatones to take up the collection.

Luilington in Sunsex has a church 16 feet square with room for 22 people. This is but a very few miles from Alfriston Church aptly named the "Cathedral of the South Downs." While Luilington Church, standing within its stately circle of eins trees, undoubtedly qualifies for consideration as one of the smallest churches still in use, there is the difficulty that, actually, it constitutes all that remains—part of the chancel, to be exact—of a larger building. There are traces of a ruined nave atill in existence. As, for instance, in the case of Malmusbury Abbey, this continued use of Another very diminutive church is the Old St. Andrew's Church at Upleatham in York-shire which is 17'9"x13' or 230% feet in area and holds (or held) a congregation of 12. Howit is no longer used which seems to mar Its claim to distinction.

Then again, while Lullington lost its nave and thus entered the community of "smallest" churches, St. Lawrence on the Isle of Wight, did exactly the opposite. Formerly only 330 feet square (30x11 feet) and therefore smaller Culbone, it added a new chancel and thus grew itself out of contention.

By way of completing the record there is a chapel at Rhos-on-Sea in Denhighshire which is only 12x6 feet and another, St. Mangaret's in Edinburgh, which is  $16\frac{1}{2}\times10\frac{1}{2}$  feet. Note, nevertheless, that these are chapels and not

And, if anybody is looking for the oldest church in the United Kingdom, this is acknowledged to be St. Martin's at Canterbury Founded on the remains of a Roman chapel dating probably to the first century, it was restored in the year 560 A.D., a project undertaken by the heathen king Ethelbert as a condition of his marriage to the Christian Prin-cess Bertha, who was the daughter of the king

Another very old church-and the building he still all original up to the level of the roof -is All Saints at Brixworth in Northamptonshire. It was dedicated between 660 and 685

I suppose it is with feelings rather akin to disappointment that I realize we only saw one out of those ten unique buildings; namely, the Parish Church at Boston. We were in the very same city as St. Margaret's Chapel and almost within the proverbial stone's throw of both Lullington and Culbone. We never approached Rhos-on-Sea, Yarmouth or the Isle As to Upleatham I only know we didn't go through it though, not having the foggiest idea of where in Yorkshire's six thousand-odd square miles it happens to be, we may have passed very close to it.

So all that remains is to consider St. Botolph's at Boston to see which, as a matter of fact, we fetched no inconsiderable compass and even stayed the night in the town.

Tower Is 'The Stump'

Approaching Boston from the north we were constantly on the lookout for "The-Stump," the endearing local name applied to the lofty church tower. We first noted it from near Benington, five miles away, though it is also visible from Lincoln which lies at a dis-tance closer to 30 miles as the crow flies. Incidentally, we saw lots and lots of crows but absolutely none flying from Lincoln to the Boston Stump or vice-versa.

But returning to Boston Church, it has been noted that it has seven doors to represent the days of the week; 12 pillars in the nave for the months of the year; 24 steps to the library suggesting the hours in a day; 52 windows equalling the number of weeks in a year. Additionally, there are 60 steps to the chancel roof and it must surely be a moot point as to whether these stand for the seconds in a minute or the minutes in an hour, Finally, there are 365 steps up "The Stump" and these are held to indicate the days in a year.

In this last case no allowance has been made for Leap Years. The tower was 49 years In the building, 1401-1450. Maybe Leap Years were ill-considered back in those days?

To what extent these parallels are mere coincidence no one can say. They do occur elsewhere. The St. Botolph's Guide Book observes guardedly and, indeed, somewhat vaguely that "such savings are not always meticulously

There are other notable features about Bos

Maybe he blessed my wife and me so that it wasn't all careful planning that made our recent English trip so happy?

There is a record of very high tides inscribed on a buttress near the west door. I never examined it but I wonder whether it lists the high tide of 1571 so poignantly reacorded by poetess Jean Ingelow? She was born in South Square in Boston and her figure is represented in a stained glass window on the north side of the church.

The tenor bell, largest of a ring of ten and weighing just over a ton, has the most delightful and appealing sound—soft but insistent—, that I have ever heard. Actually it is in the key of E flat but there is something about its complete lack of stridence and clangour that makes it to me supremely attractive. I shall remember that mellow sound for a long, long

Leaning Pillars

If you stand in the wide space at the west end of the church nave you cannot fail to notice how all the pillars lean eastwards, which is an eccentricity due to the weight of the

It would certainly seem that, in the early days, a good deal of building was done "by guess and by God" rather than with any great knowledge of stresses, strains and kindred en-gineering problems. This led to all manner of tragedies. The northwestern Tower of of tragedies. The northwestern Tower of Chichester Cathedral collapsed in 1835 and the central tower in 1861. Hereford lost its west tower in 1786. The central spire of the three "Ladies of the Vale" at Lichfield was knocked down during a three-day bombardment during the Civil War. The central tesser at Lincoln disintegrated in 1237, reportedly just after the preacher had loudly proclaimed that "the very stones cry out." That at Elywent in 1322; the spire of Norwich in 1361; Winchester about 1100. Malmesbury Abbey lost both spire and west tower. And so on lost both spire and west tower. through a lengthy calendar of catastrophes. However, a certain William Joyce, apparently both engineer and architect, came along about 1358 with his design for "straineh" arches. These he inserted in Wells Cathedral where crossing piers were beginning to sink beneath the welght of the tower. Whether artistically pleasing or not, the strainer arches did the job of supporting the tower so well was a form of the tower at Wells was that, far from falling, the tower at Wells was added to and similar arches were installed elsewhere as, for instance, in famous Canterbury Cathedral.

Those leaning pillars at St. Botolph's make all these historical tidbits even more interesting and certainly more real.

Up 'The Stump'

Mrs. Binny and I, with a pardonable desire to "do" everything possible and upon payment of a small fee, climbed up the Boston "Stump." We reached the parapet just where the flying buttresses begin; round and round and round and round up a narrow, dim, circular stairway like two bewildered centipedes in a tube.

The view admittedly was superb beyond the town and across the flat fen-country towards Tattershall Castle in the northwest and towards The Wash and the little hills of Sandringham to the southeast.

But it was also rather terrifying at that dizzy height. Not only that but we had made the error of looking at those learing pillars BEFORE we added our weight to that of the tower which caused them to lean.

Oddly enough I had difficulty in conjuring up enthusiastic interest in the view. Some wise saying about "the last straw" kept filt-ting through my mind.

"How about going down again?" I suggested airily. I wondered whether my small theatrical experience was enough to make me appear as nonchalant as I certainly wasn't. But I have never put forward a proposal that met with less argument or more ready acceptance than this one in all my life.

We descended.

The lean on the pillars had not increased noticeably.

Next time I go to England I shall go to Culbone and seek permission to climb up on the roof.

The view may not be as breathtaking as that provided by Saint Botolph but at least I anticipate enjoying it to the full, undisturbed by other alarming thoughts.

Tilikum Knew Hardships and Heroisms

VOSS RISKED DISASTER FOR A MATE

By the time Voss had reached England and the end of the great 40,000-mile voyage, a total of 11 men had, for varying periods of time, served with him as mate, though when the news of the triumphant finale spread out to the papers of the world there were only nine of these left alive to say, "I was with that man!"

Who were the 11 who shared not only the adventures and trials of life in Tilikum but also the experience of living in a cramped solitude "a deux" with this unique and strongly-individualistic man?

Voss' first companion, of course, was the Capadian journalist, Norman Luxton, the man who in conversation with Voss at his Queen's Hotel at the foot of Johnson Street, said that if he (Voss) thought he could cross the world's great oceans in a boat smaller than Slocum's Spray, then so much in the news, the journalist would come along as crew and finance the expedition by the writing of articles describing their experiences.

Voss quickly took up the offer and the result was the long voyage taken between May, 1901, and August, 1904, by the slim cance TERum, a vessel one-third the tonange of the Spray.

That Luxton, totally unacquainted as he was with the sea, should so freely volunteer to undertake this cruse is a tribute both to his own courage and to the confidence that Voss' personality must have inspired.

And so the woyage began.

Laxton's introduction to the sea was at first gentle as some weeks were spent on the West Coast, but on July 6, loaded down with supplies to a 14-inch free-board, they faced out into the ocean. Five days later came their first gale. As one looks now at the narrow deck of Tilkum one sympathizes with a Luxton ordered to go forward and throw over the sea anchor.

On hands and knees the green hand made his way howards the bow, dropped the sea anchor . . . and then looked up to see a huge wave fast approaching! With one leap he was up in the foremast rigging—a proceeding that gave bow at the tiller some tricky moments in coping with this sudden rearrangement of balance.

However, Luxton had plenty of time to redeem himself in the eight weels it took them to travel from Vancouver Island to their next landfall and he earned Voos' respect. One hopes, though, that Voos too was happy enough at this first glimpse of terra firms, not to be too "milty" when he had to turn Tilikum 'round to_retrieve the hat that a joyous Luxton had thrown into the air in celebration!

This first companion continued on with Voss as far as Suva but here he decided to take a break from small boat travel and to go on to Australia by steamship, his intention being at that lime to rejoin Voss at Sydney. The end story of mate No. 2 the

The sad story of mate No. 2 the young Tasmanian, Louis Begent, whom Voss then picked up at Buva, has already been told and when the Victoria captain reached Sydney he was alone.

Here he found that Luxton, influenced perhaps by the tragedy, had decided to abandon the idea of sniling further, and in fact tried hard to persuade Voss to de likenies—an idea of course quite contrary to the nature of that determined individual.

For a time now he needed no mate as he spont some weeks displaying Tilikum in tents, first at Sydney, then at Newcastle. 'This career as showman was one that Voss carried on throughout the three years of the expedition and will form the subject of a later article.)

At Newcastle he took on a man who earned his respect by his utter unwillingness to give up in the face of paraintent neusickness. A. Hamfiton, mate No. 3, had only nerved in consting vessels before and anyhow Yoss always said Tilikum would make anyone sick. This time the copious draughts of sea-water that were Voss' favorite remedy and that had worked so well on Laxton, were useless and for two whole weeks the nauses continued, till Voss felt the man's life was in danger. Yet still he refused to be put off in a passing steamer but stayed with her till they reached their destination at Meliouurne.

The companionship of mate No. 4 was a fleeting experience. Voss had picked up this budding young yachtsman when he had the canoe on display at a lake in inland Ballarat, but whatever ideas of the joys of sail this lad may have picked up when he sailed on the sheltered lake at home, they were quickly dispelled when Voss took Tilikum out to test major repairs in the "choppy seas" off Geelong.

That the repairs held, though he "put her bows under," satisfied Vom-but not the young man. At sailing time next morning he was missing—and probably spent the rest of his life regretting it!

Captain Voss was now forced to wire a sailors' home in Melbourne for mate No. 5, and possibly looked with rather jaundiced eye when, the next day, the new man arrived drunk, his footsteps loslowing whatever path his dunnage bag took. This merry character oo was less than impressed when he found that he was not to join e largest windjammer anchore att shore to which he casually suggested Voss in his little boat might ferry him, but instead the little boat imelf. He proved who sober a good seaman and a good companion but was too often inebriated and at Adelaide parted.

Mate No. 6 was literally Vome most picturesque companion for he was tattooed all over his body and claimed the title of Tattooed Man of Australia. (A psinting of Voss and this man on Tillium would be a colorful addition to the list of last week.)

Between Voss and mate No. 7 there was a closer connection than with most for Voss vivited at this man's home and so witnessed his tender leave-taking from his wife whose tear-filled brown eyes caused Voss to promise that he would look after her beloved man, little realising the demand this was going to make on him later.

This moment of truth came on a day when in heavy seas Voss noticed that the fore throat halyard had unbuckled and when the

He Went Home to England to Become the Mayor of Glastonbury, Somerset

JOHN BAILY, Pioneer of '62

John Baily, out from England, was one of the first four settlers to arrive in Comox Valley in August, 1862. He took up a large block of land bordering that of his friend Reginald Terry Carwithen from Devon, England. H. C. Blaksley owned Rennison Farm

In 1865 Mr. Baily got up a barn-building bee" which Eric Duncan described as follows Drabble, being the oldest man, was appointed cook for the occasion. At night the crowd congratulated him on his culinary ability, and especially on a splendid cake he made. He told them it ought to be good for he put two large eggs in it, but he confessed later, that unto Baily he had added 10 more eggs!"

Mr. Buily returned to England after nine or ten years, where he married and became Mayor of Glastonbury, Somernet.

His farm in Comox was rented to various settlers-Parry, Creech, Shopland and others.

There were rumers that the Bully house— as we called it—might be replaced by a mod-ern building. This was enough to interest two members of the Courtenay and District His-torical Society. Mrs. Doris Tonkin, with car and camera, and myself, with kind permission of the present owners, set out one beautiful spring morning along the Sandwick Hendquar ters Road. The blue of the mountains on the left, glistening with snow, was alone worth the three-mile drive. Cown grazed contentedly among the oalf trees on the prairie-like land. On the right, well back from the road, stood the original Bally house: with the sun beaming down it was looking its best, and it should stand straight, for it was built in the days of 1962 on a firm foundation of blocks of oak! Thick plants, over one foot wide, ran the full length and width of the sides of the house, becoming almost petrified through the years In fact, the present owner finds it very difficult to drive a nail into it!

Of course some changes had been made, but what stories the old house could tell of one hundred years ago!

A few minutes later he heard a noise on the forward end of the boat. Going out to investigate and finding the deck empty he looked overboard and there, floating in the water on the weather side of the ship, was the body of his mate, apparently serveless.

Acrons his mind now flashed the memory of the vow he had taken when he lost Begent that if any other man went overboard from Tilikum he would save him or die in the attempt and this we reinforced by the remembrance of a woman's tear-filled eyes.

Seizing the end of a life-line and leaving the security of his faithful boat into the stormy sees Jumped this diminutive man. Quickly he turned the mate over on to his back, tied the lifeline around his body, got back in Till-kum, and hauled the mate on days with Voss when a big following sea came in over the stern, invaded the cabin and did much damage, destroying the Primus stove. For some days they had no hot food or drink but then Voss thought of making a make-shift stove out of a bucket with sand in the bottom and holes punched around the sides for draught. The stove made, for fuel there were boards—and soon they were rejolcing in hot coffee. On this stove the mate later made "Australian pancakes" but an ungrate-ful Vom likened them to the "Rock of Gibraltar."

The next change of mates was at Dunedin, New Zealand, where. so Vom said, everyone was called "Mc-Something" and it was not till he called himself McVoss that he succeeded in getting anyone to join him. The name of mate No. 8 who accompanied him to Christ-church? McDonald.

The replacement he took on here was the only one of his mates who had had a career as colorful as Voss' own. Apprenticed in youth in the Invercargill, Buckridge had been taken by pirates, had gone pearling fought in the Boer War where he had been wounded three times at Spion Kop and when he joined the Tilikum, had just returned from the Antarctic where he had been frozen in with Captain Scott's party.

Though this man, mate No. 9, was a seasoned seaman he was not nimble enough to cope with the actions of a small boat and one day in winds so high that Tilikum running under stormsalis Voss found the 200-pound man bying senseless across the narrow over the other but a few inches above the fierce waves. No time then for Vom to do more than hash him to the foremest and return to the saving of the boat itself.

For such a man as Buckridge life on a small boat inspired an ambition to build one of his own and soon he left to make one to "race you to England." But, alas! when Vons reached Durban months later he heard that his competitor and his yawl had been

The next mate was one of the three who made really long legs of the journey with Tilikum's master. Luxton was the first, and now came the E-year-old Irish-man. "Father Mac," mate No. 9, who was to stay with the ship from Auckland to South Africa Trained for the church but not following it, this young man had at least done some yachting, but the qualification that really got him, the job was his ability to tell a

The man at East Losslop was young Harrison, the 11th and last mate, and third to make a trans oceanic crossing with Voss. Suf-fering from "a touch of tubercu-losis," the young railroad clerk hoped that a time at sea might save his life. Indeed, it did, and the only danger he was in after that was from the shortage of food that threatened them when, by the time they were in mid-Ablantic, Harrison's returning appetite assumed gigantic proportions and almost emptied their larder.

From South Africa he first sailed with Voss to Pernambuca. There he saw the Canadian flag changed and perhaps it was his hand that "dipped our new British ensign three times" when they left Pernambuco accompanied by a steamship crowded with admirers, among them the British Consul who had so "unwillingly" ordered the removal of the Canadian flag under which Voss had sailed for three adventure-filled years.

And so at last, England! What happened to this last mate after they reached there is unknown but surely Voss, that warm-hearted man, must have rejeiced to have with him at the end a young man who had had health and life given back to him by Tillkum! (CONTINUED NEXT WEEK)

CANADIAN LAW REACHED A LONG ARM

Two Killers Taken

PART II

Ward, a two-time loser on morals charges, now held for rape (cognisant of course that only Negroes get the death penalty), turned out to be a breezy young man with a soft southern accent. schom Russill promptly figured was trying to work his way to freedom by the "co-operation route."

Anyway, he had this to say in the warden's office.

Seems that when he became Willie McLean's cell mate, first thing that caught his eye were the words, "William McLean-Murderer," scrawled on the

"What's that mean?" he asked.

"That's me!" said young McLean, in boastful tone. Later, said Ward, McLean imparted the whole story of the Manville murder, telling how he drove the car to the scene and how his father fired the fatal shot.

It was interesting, if true; still Russill knew that men of Ward's stamp would say anything to get out of a jam. Besides he might have read it in a newspaper.

As Russill turned once again to the search for local cluss, the same sort of hunt was continuing in Alberta where finally a couple of .250/.3000 cartridges were found behind a workbench at Pursille's now ownerless farm. At first it was thought they'd be handy in identifying Pursille's missing Savage rifle, if it ever turned up. But who was to say the cart-ridges were fired in Pursille's gun? Had anyone ever seen him fire them?

Pursuing this angle, a brother of the murdered man was asked if he'd ever been around. when Walter fired the gun.

Fortunate Find

THE BROTHER THOUGHT for a minute or two-Yes, he had, but it was a long, long time ago. In fact 15 years since the day he and Walter took the Savage rifle out and crouching behind a stone pile near a boundary fence, tried to get a shot at some coyotes attracted by a dead horse.

Guiding the police to the spot, after searching around under the now snow-matted stubble, sure enough they came across half a dozen weather-stained rifle cartridges: Off to the Edmonton lab they went, to get Henry Brace's microscopic scrutiny. Despite a decade and a half of summer heat and winter frost, each bore the inescapable marks of the same telltale firing pin, the same faint tool marks impressed from the breech block. Not only did they tally with the shells found behind Pureille's workbench, but now the police could positively identify Pursille's gun if ever turned up. It was like knowing its serial Meantime 2,000 miles away in Tennessee. Russill went ahead checking the crossroads stores in rural Scott County, still trying to find trace of anyone who bought or ordered shells for a .303 Ross or a .250 3000 Savage. Soon however, it was evident the Ross was out; not only had none of these cartridges been sold, but it was Starlf was completely unknown.

When occasionally it's said a detective in Bucky, usually the truth is he has just been Thus it happened that Russill's CECIL CLARK

LAST WEEK, from the case book of Henry Brace, voteran Alberta detective and ballistics expert, crime writer Cecil Clark gave a first instalment flashback on the 30-year-old case of bachelor-farmer Walter Pursille, shot through the heart one night outside his farmhouse door near Manville, Alberta.

An empty 300 Savage rifle cartridge and parts of the fatal bullet were the most important/clues found at the scene, tests wing they were used in a .303 Ross. Later, cases fired from the same gun were found on the abandoned Saskatchewan farm of father and son suspects, Kenneth and William McLenn, thought to have fled

When later they are julied in Tenne under the name of Peart, RCMP Det.-Cpt. Frank Eussill heads there, to comb the foothills of the Cumberland mountains for trace of either the Ross or the muring since the night of the murder.

Then Gene Ward, the younger Mc-Lean's cell mate in a Knoxville jail, tips the warden to something he learned and Russill is recalled to listen to his story.

persistence paid off one afternoon when he asked the same old question of James A. Baker, a Huntsville hardware dealer: had anyone ever bought any Savage .250/3000 shells?

Never Called

BAKER RECALLED that someone had, about a month or so back; but come to think of it, the man never called back for them. More interest-ing still, the description of the absentminded customer fitted old man Mc-Lean!

"He didn't come back," surm sed Russill, "because he landed in Dither that or he read in a paper about the arrival of a Canadian policeman and figured it too dangerous to go back for the shells."

From Huntsville, a town of 500, it's but a few miles to Oneida, just south of the Kentucky border, where by sheer luck (or persistence?) Russill next day ran into a man called Beattie, operator of a small tourist camp and gas station. Russill's idle conversation led up to guns, and when he mentioned a .250 3000 Savage, Beattie said he recently met a man who had one.

Seems he was a stranger, between 50 and 60, who pulled up to the pump one day with a "beat-up" car to get the not unusual combination of a gallon of moonshine and $2 worth of gas. He didn't have the $2 for the gas or even $2 for the corn likker, so left as security a .250/3000 Savage "You all know the type?" Bee

Beattie enquired in his slow drawl. "We all cawl's it a fish gun, down heah."

"Where is it now?" asked, Russil,

"Well, suh," went on Beattle, "a man come and picked it up bout week later, pi and the foah dollars and . . . One a Fighter with 72 Scars

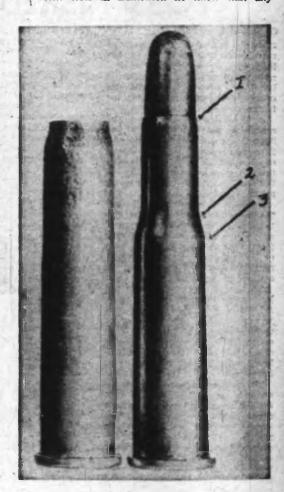

Russill produced pictures of the McLeans and right away Beattle identified Kenneth Me-Lean as the man who left the gun, and by his description the man who later redeemed it was old Josh Sharp, head of the Sharp clan-

RUSSILL REMEMBERED that Kenneth McLean had married a Cassie Sharp: It was to her kinfolk they had come after the Alberta murder. Date of the first transaction at the gas pump was just before the McLeans were arrested trying to dispose of a stolen car. Probably from prison he got word to old man Sharp to get hold of the tell-tale gun. Probably by now, thought Russill, it had been destroyed, or was resting in some deep fishing hole, skirted by the foam flecked eddies of a lonely mountain "branch."

Meantime the gas man was talking, and Russill, jerked back from his thoughts, heard Beattle remark how the gun shot to the right-bout six inches in 200 yahds,

"How did you know?" said Russill. Because, the resort owner explained, his old pappy happened by a day or two later, and seeing the gun leaning against the wall took it out to a patch of scrub to try it.

It was then the detective's mental processes flashed to "red alert"; notified of Brace's recent tests in Edmonton he knew that any fired cases would identify the gun. It was all that Russill needed, and in quick time he rounded up "of pappy" and made him show where he fired the practice shots. Sure enough (or "sho' nuff") tramped lightly in the soil were three or four empty cartridges.

Within hours Russill was on his way to Edmonton with them, and a day or two later Henry Brace again came up with the answer. The gun that McLean left with the resort owner as security for his gas and liquor, was Pursille's gun! Regardless of time or space, the acience of ballistics had tallied the "finger-prints" of the 15-year-old shells fired in the Alberta wheatland with those fired in a Tecnossee hickory grove!

Gallows Building

PT SEEMED maybe to Russill, as he studied the photographic proof, that somehow Henry Brace had turned carpenter; using the unerthodox tools of camera and microscope, plank by plank he was building a gallows!

Back again in Tennessee, Russil's further enquiries about the guns seemed to meet a dead end; probably, as he surmised, Josh Sharp had seen to the gun's disappaarance—

Which wouldn't, he thought, be the only nearet locked in the recesses of Josh's mind, as the gaunt and bearded patriarch rocked at his case on the bare board stoop of his mountain stronghold with no less than 20 Sharps within hall of his voice! And really for trouble!

For some were prepared to swear that it was Josh who killed Lem Phillips last fall (about the time of the Manville murder) when Lem, ex-husband of a Sharp girl, got likkered up one night and came pounding at the Sharp's cabin door. He pounded just so long, then a bullet from inside quelled his noise forever.

Though Mrs. Philips claimed she had shot him, it was figured to be more or lass idle bonsting. Lem's father, a local preacher, raised a bit of a ruckus at the time, but after Josh had a talk with him, the preacher wrote a letter to the Scott County News saying his son's death "though regrettable was unavoidable," and explained "the matter has been mathanactrily settled out of court by members of our family and those of Mr. Sharp."

"Because," as he put it, "the situation is of primary importance to our individual families and should be of secondary importance to the public."

Which perhaps served to explain to Russill why there had been only two white men executed for murder in the state in 20 years!

Canadian Bills

IN THES INFORMAL atmosphere, Russill pursued another interesting angle to the case. Though the McLeans had been on relief before leaving Saskatchewan, he had found that, just prior to their Tennessee arrest, they had changed a few Canadian $20 bills; and the detective had in mind that the murdered Pursille had twenty-eight $20 bills in his possession just prior to his murder. Just to see how many the McLeans did change, Rissill set out to follow methodically the path of their flight from the East End, Saskatchewan, to Tennessee. First they used a little known border crossing side road to bypase the U.S. Immigration, then passed through Chinook, Montana. That's where they had stolen the car that got them into trouble in Tennessee.

From Chinook, Russill found their route through Minneapolis where (luck or persistence?) he found a bank teller who remembered McLan as a man who exchanged $300 in Canadian currency, at 11 per cent discount. He picked him out of a lineup later on.

As McLean senior had only a cheque for $22.50 (for a week's work on a threshing gang) when he was last seen around Manville, this sudden affluence required explanation.

When these and other facts, coupled with the story of the guns, was retold at a Knox-wille extradition hearing, the McLeans were soon on their way back to Canada. It was just ten months after their brutal crime that they faced judge and jury at Vegreville, Alberta. First to be tried and convicted was 21-year-old William, who listened to his sentence of death

MURIEL WILSON'S THOUGHT FOR FOOD

Like Omar Khayyam we seek paradise beneath the bough. Man is an outdoor creature, turning to the sun as naturally as the sunflower. Come summer we move out of our homes into the green world . . . we have to get air into our lungs and starlight into our eyes. We turn to the woods and mountains, to the lakes, rivers and seashore . . . the world is ours to enjoy. We pitch a tent or park a trailer and we own the very sky. We eat in the open with the savor of the fresh air and all the things that grow and we become heirs to all of Nature's bounty.

Of course facilities for outdoor cooking are usually something less than you would have in your own kitchen—and just when family appetites are bigger than ever! However, there are recipes specially designed for samp cooking . . . recipes using available ingredients and a minimum of cooking equipment. Most of the ingredients are canned, packaged or dehydrated or those than can be purchased at any crossroads country

Recently a magazine called "Better Camping" came to my deak. It is check-a-block full of every sort of camping information and ideas. Today I would like to pass along some suggestions perturning to food. So, let's go a-camping.

First we must consider a market list with con-adderation for items that will cut down weight and space without too much sacrifice of flavor purishment. A few luxury foods must be tucked in. The range of prepared and partially prepared products are almost unlimited today. We will start with a very basic list and leave you to fill in the extras: Salt, pepper, segar, tea you to fill in the extras: Salt, pepper, segar, tea and coffee; instant rice, instant potatom, sauce mixes, onion fiskes, prepared biscuit mix and de-hydrated fruits; fruit juice concentrates, canned beans, evaporated and powdered milk; theree, eggs and bacon of course. The fresh produce you take depends on the facilities you have for its preservation. Be sure to include aluminum foil, it has dozens of uses, and wax-lined bags for garbage,

If your first dinner is to be eaten on the read or at your destination it is a good idea to prepare the main dish at home so that it will just need re-heating. If the distance is not far, a casserole will keep hot for a number of hours If wrapped in several thicknesses of newspaper.
If you own a wide-mouthed, vacuum-type jug you are lacky . . , food can be kept hot (or cold) for 34 hours. Here is a fine recipe for that make at-home, first meal casserole. This of course could be made on a wood stove at camp or even over

ORIENTAL CUT-UP . . . Three pounds hamburger, 1 large onlon, 2 cups celery, 2 thup, soy sauce, 2 tims cream chicken soup, 2 tims cream of mushroom soup, 1 tim cream of celery soup, 1 large and 1 small box of instant rice.

Chop the onion and celery fine and saute in son fat or salad oil. Remove from pan and brown the hamburger. Do about half at a time so that it can be nicely browned. Now mix the onion, celery and all the other ingredients to gether. 15 minutes cooking over low heat should be sufficient. Add as much water as needed... I would use about 2 cups to start and add more if thinner consistency is desired after rice is cooked. This makes a lot... enough for 12 persons or several meals for a small family. This sort of dish always improves with reheating. If you haven't any means of refrigeration, just cut the recipe in half.

There are a number of things that can be pre-pared, at home for the first few meals . . . cook a large roast the day before you leave home, chill well, wrap in foil and carry in your lee box. Besides your first meal at camp it will provide sandwich fillings for several days and finally an end-of-the-roast casserole.

Little meat turnovers can be made at home these can be baked, chilled and wrapped in foil to be eaten cold or placed in an insulated bag and kept hot for on-the-road eating.

Make meat balls shead . . . these can be used for a hurry-up meal with a packaged sauce mix. Cook a dozen hard cooked eggs before you leave home, carry in the ice box. Use for sandwich filling, salads

Boil scrubbed potatoes, cool, pack in plastic bag. These can be used for hash browns, salad or in a quick stew. Eating is an important part of a camping vacation . . . the more that can be done ahead toward meals, the more time later for mother.

Of course there is a fisherman in every camping party, so let's talk a little about what to do with the catch. It will of course be cleaned when it reaches the kitchen. Small fish are usually fried whole after removing the head and breaking the backbone (to prevent the fish curling in the

"The stories," says Wilson

Duff, provincial anthropologist, "have the ring of authenticity . . . The students have made sincere efforts to obtain the real traditions from the older people."

And again: "I would grant the sea-lion story first place. Indian traditions have a lot of confusing transitions of animals into human forms and these are difficult to make understandable to non-Indians. James Peter went ahead and told the whole story anyway, and it rings true."

Of 'The Twin Brothers,' he says: "The Nootka believe that twins had supernatural powers . . . The story rings true to Indian beliefs about twins and about the land of the dead." Here are the essays:

THE BOY WHO BECAME A SEA-LION

There lived a boy. He was the only boy in his family. This boy was very lazy. All he did was lie in bed all day. If a beautiful day dawned he would go out on the porch and do nothing all day. He was so lazy that even his body was unkept. His legs and neck were very dirty.

But his father could stand it no more and he was angry.

"My son, you should not sleep so much. You should do something. The other boys of the village who are your age are out there shooting ducks." On saying this the angry father picked up a stick and beat his son.

After this the boy started bathing. Every hight when everyone was sleeping he went bathing in a river on the other side of the vil-He went bathing every night for one week. Before day came he went into the house and rubbed dirt off the earth floor onto his Slowly he went further and further. He thought he was not going far enough, so off the beach he took up a smooth, round peddle as large as an egg. With this he could stay under longer.

After many nights he could dive far and then he dived, coming up for air once in awhile. He did not conceal himself and he travelled in the durkness of night and all day, along the coast towards the morth

Here and there he found many sea-lions resting and sleeping. This boy in the sea-lion skin dived and dived. When he was tired he stopped with the sealions who were always on the rocks resting. He would climb up on the rocks in the fashion of the great sea creatures, but they would scatter from him in fright.

Swimming up the the coast of Vancouver Island, he reached Cape Scott. Then a strange thing happened to the boy. He are the raw foods of the sea-lions and he became like the creatures altogether. He dived with ease and went great distances.

brave boy did the most daring thing. He left the land and went to open sea towards the Queen Charlotte Islands.

Many days and nights the boy in the sea-Mon skin travelled. Then he saw land after many weeks of diving and swimming.

He was not only interested in the land. He looked for the sea-lions swimming or resting on the rocks. Not long after he nighted ma-lions on a rocky little island. After all his travelling a Spirit had entered him and he was the son-lion, but he thought himself to be unchanged and just a boy in a sea-lion skin.

Among the sea-lion people he observed the men that had been fish hunting entering their homes with nothing but rock cod and black bass. These fish, the boy knew, were not living in deep water.

To the Chief of the sea-lion people, whom he was living with, he said, "I also am going fishing.

But when he was hunting one day he saw a village. He wished he were there and walk-ing on solid ground. But he stayed in the water swimming back and forth, waiting for Then came the night and he went ashore. He did not go on to the village beach, He went a distance from the village and walked the rest of the way. At the village he knew where the Chief's house might be. He approached the Chief's house which was very large. Between the plants he peeked into the house and saw a girl. He went into the house and pushed the girl.

The girl just asked, "Who are you?" The boy refused to tell. He just started a conversation. Before daybreak he left and said, "I will be back. I want to be married with Ask your parents if I may have your hand in marriage.

He woke in the morning to hear that there was a great sea-lion on the beach sleeping. To his wife he said, "That sea-lion is what I have come in. My home is a great distance away."

Here he lived with the unknown people. He had left the sea-lion people to be with a new wife. He lived here for many years hunting and fishing for the people. The girl's father liked him very much because he always came back from hunting with a lot of food for everyone.

After many years with the people, two sons were born to him. Then a thought struck him. He was wondering if his parents were alright. At that time the boy had a sea-gull, Every time he came in from flying somewhere he would tell his master what he had seen and where he had been.

The Friendly Sea-Gull Led the Way

He told the sea-gull that the great house sight be all disassembled with only the framework standing. He told the sea-gull how the village was and where it was. The boy understood the sea-gull's language and the sea-gull sould understand him.

Then the sea-gull flew and flew to the south. He reached the village and found the place the boy had described. He landed on the rafter of the great framework and listened to the woman crying and talking about her lost son. On seeing this the sea-gull flew home back to his master. When he reached the village he told the boy how his parents felt. Hearing this the boy almost wept. Again the boy made his trusty pet fly to his parents. This time he put his earrings on the sea-gull. These earrings showed that he was a Chief. The little sea-gull flew through the air with a pair of earrings on.

Towards the parents' home the sea-gull flew. Many days he flew towards the destination. He arrived there. He looked for the old woman who always sat on the beach. If the were not there on the beach the boy had taid him to enter the hut.

Into the little, house walked the sea-gull. He went to meet the old man, but he was kicked by the rude man. He was discouraged and he flew onto the woman's lap. She started petting him, for she was kind. She smiled and talked to the sea-guil. The sea-guil turned its head and she saw the earrings.

Excitedly she said to her husband, "Come quickly! Come and see! Look! This must be our son."

At this they wept. The old man who had kicked the sea-guil, picked it up and held it in his arms. At that moment they were beginning to eat. They began eating and they had their sea-guil in between them, for they thought it was their lost son.

There come a visitor who was called over by the man to see the earrings on the sea-gull. The man said, "Go you to get my crier. Tell him I want him."

The visitor rushed over to the crier and told the man he was wanted on an important matter. The crier went to the Chief and he was told to tell the people his son was back.

The sea-gull remembered that his master had said, "Do anything my parents want you to do."

That same day the great house was rebuilt and that night there was a great feast in honor of the sea-guil. But the following morning the sea-gull disappeared. He was flying back to his master. He arrived and went straight to his master.

The little pet walked back and forth in front of the boy and told him how the parents were. The boy laughed at the thought of the seasoull being dressed in a festival costume.

aca-gull being dressed in a festival costume.

The boy decided to go home and he told the people of the village he was living in. They got ready to go and they set out in the four large canoes. The boy said, "It is not I who will guide you. My pet sea-gull will fly abead and land just in sight of us. When we reach him he will again take off and fly towards the direction of my home."

Then they began their journey, following the sea-gull. Many weeks they travelled until the boy said the land was becoming familiar.

The canoes turned shorewards and they were in sight of a village when the boy was struck dumb and couldn't speak. When they hit the beach the people from the canoes immediately went up the shore, and the pacents who had lost their son saw him, not as a boy but as a grown man. He had four sons the two boys with him and his wife now, and the sea-lions with his sea-lion wife whom he had met when he was in the sea-lion skin.

A long time ago, at a place called Walthu, there were two boys who were twins. Their names were Maclauh and Quatin

One day Maclauh became very ill. They would not let his twin brother see him. The next day their father noticed that his son was dying so he took Ouatin on a trip to look for therring. When they returned, after three days, they found out Maclauh had passed away while they were gone.

Every day Ouatin asked the people where they had put Maclauh, but no one would answer him. Finally, after asking every adult and teenager, he strolled over to some of the little girls playing dolls together and asked the same question. One of the little girls answered him.

"He is in a huge square box up in that tree," she replied, pointing to an evergreen

Ouatin was satisfied and ran to climb the tree. When he reached the top of the tree, where Maclauh's box was hidden, he forced the top of the box to open. After getting it open with an old piece of steel he climbed in and suddenly Maclauh spoke.

"In that you, my dear brother?" Before Ouatin could answer Maclauh spoke again. "I

Without giving Ouatin a chance to answer he shoved his brother inside himself, then leaped down from the top of a twenty-nine-foot tree. He dashed for the shoreline where a dogfish was waiting. Without waiting to eatch his breath he crawled onto the back of the fish. He grabbed the gills and with his soot he kicked the fish. Immediately the fish began to swim. After a few hours they reached a shoreline of a village which Quatin had never seen before. They got off and the fish swirled away.

At the village Maclauh always talked to Ouatin, but the people thought he was crazy because they couldn't see Ouatin, and Maclauh never stopped talking.

One day they went swimming. Not knowing som one had followed them Maclauh released duatin. The person who saw all this told the other people. They went down to the stream where Maclauh and Ouatin were swimming. They told Maclauh never to put Ouatin Inside him again because they wanted Maclauh to marry one of the women there. The next day he was married.

When the people said Ouatin must marry he refused and said that he wanted to go home.

He trotted over to a couple of old women and asked where they were going. They answered him. "We are going to your village."

When he asked if he could go along they told him to be there before sunrise tomorrow morning.

The next morning. Ouatin hurried over to the old women who were waiting for him.

A little while after they had left the wind began to shriek through the air. The canoe rocked back and forth and for the first time Quatin noticed that each side of the canoe was halfway off. flapping in the wind.

One of the women saw that he was afraid so she covered him with a blanket. When they reached the beach of Walthie they took the blanket off him and put another blanket on him. The instant the blanket touched him he became invisible.

The old women put on their blankeis also.

They went from house to house killing one person in each house. Their first victim was a rich woman. One of the old women, invisible under her blanket, went and aat beside her victim. As soon as the blanket touched the rich woman she let out a shriek and fell down, not moving.

The wealthy husband called the other people to help him-put his wife in a box and place her on top of the tallest tree. Some of the people helped select his wife's useless belongings and the rest was given to his cousin. After her belongings were thrown away the old women took them and put them into their cance.

They went to another house and told Ouatin to do what they had done, so he went and sat beside a young, handsome man. The instant Ouatin's blanket touched the young man he also gave a loud cry and died. Of course the young man's parents threw his belongings away and the old women loaded them into their cance.

When they came to Ouatin's house, where his parents were grieving for him, the old women took their blanket off him saying that they wouldn't kill his parents because he had helped them to kill a few people so they could have their victim's belongings.

The instant the blanket was off him Ouatin

It originated when a squaw's husband died and she was left by herself in their tent. Every day she went for a walk in the woods and she would see a hawk in a tree looking at her. Finally it began coming into her tent and making noises, but no one else could hear or see it but her. Finally she went to the Chief and told him.

One night she heard the bird again in her tent. She went for the Chief and when she got back he was still there. They began throwing fire around in the tent and it burnt and the spirit was gone, and it never came back after the fire was in the tent—and the Indians of today still practice this ceremony after the death of one in the family.

THE LITTLE CABINON BOBTAIL LAKE

The little log cabin on the shore of what is now Lake Naltesby in the Cariboo country is obviously old. It was there when the first settler moved in, and has caused much speculation among the inhabitants of the district as to just when it was built. They have a strong feeling that It has an interesting history, and there is much discussion about it in the area of Vanderhoof, Mapes and Quesnel. Who built it, and when? Was it the home of a trapper, recluse or fugitive from justice? Where has the builder gone, and does anyone know anything about him?

The cabin has indeed an interesting history. If you go up to it by the seldom used dirt road that cuts off Highway 97 just out of Quesnel you will be following the trail of the pioneers. This was the old Telegraph Trail, and it was the maintenance cabin and telegraph office of Bobtail Lake. That was the original name of the lake beside which the cabin stands. Starting in the fall of 1901 a busy traffic shuttled back and forth from Ashcroft to Alaska—but it didn't leave a worn pathway through the woods. It was carried on a wire that looped from tree to tree and pole to pole across the country.

When my brother Dauglas, of Edmonton, same upon the cabin in June of 1963 after a diligent search he was jubilant and excited. He had never seen it before, nor had any living member of our family. But it is familiar to us none-the-less, for it was built by our father, William Tyndall Broderick and his partner in the summer of 1902. We have heard its construction described by him over the years as he reminisced about his life as an operator for the Yukon Telegraph Service.

How the Tukon Telegraph came into existence, and how and why the cubin was built has always been a part of our family history, and since the discovery of the cubin it has also become part of our country's history. Because of the dearth of information on what was an important milestone in our progress, the B.C. dejautment of parks and recreation has decided to preserve the little cabin as one of the few artifacts of the once important Yulson Telegraph Service.

Klondike Rush

When the discovery of gold in the Yukon Territories sent thousands of men hurrying north it caused it to grow in a few months from a wilderness to a scene of intense activity as the cheechako from the south dug for riches in the rivers and creeks. It was an isolated area, the gold fields of the Yukon, with only dog team communication with the outside. So the miners, and the businessmen who kept them supplied with food and equipment, petitioned Ottawa for some means of communication. In those early days it meant sending by dog team to the coast, then by steamer to the "outside." A week or more would clapse before a message could get through.

Finally, after much stalling on account of the great cost, the government started work on a telegraph line through the wilderness of the Cariboo country, across the Yulon and up to Dawson on the Yukon River. Thence it continued on to the Alaska boundary. The work commenced from both ends, and once the right-of-way had been surveyed the slashing crews worked mightily cutting the heavy timber through the valleys and across the rugged mountain terrain. When the line was cleared the wire was packed in, along with the heavy insulators, on mule and pack house from the rail point of Ashcroft. By the fall of 1900 the line was strung from Ashcroft north to the headwaters of the Nass River, above Hazelton. From the Alaska boundary it ran south to a point just below Telegraph Creek on the Stikine River. Then bad weather forced a halt, leaving a short gap.

As the construction of the line progressed the job of finding personnel for its maintenance was in progress. It would take linemen to mend breaks in the swaying strand of wire, to hunt down and correct the many spots where it would ground and short circuit. Then too, telegraph operators would be needed; men of a specialized trade who could, by the use of key and sounder send and receive. In the early years of the present century not many men had that trade, and those who did were in great demand, for there was no other means of long distance communication.

Westward in '90

My father had come west from the Owen Sound country of Ontario with his family in 1890. While his parents settled in the small city of Vancouver he was sent back to Toronto to finish his schooling. Then, arriving back on the Pacific Coast he studied electricity, and became a lineman for the B.C. Electric Company. Soon the romance of telegraphy caught him, and as the booming railroad age had begun with the continental linkage by the new Canadian Pacific Railway, a great demand for telegraphers assured employment.

From his parents' home on Fleming Street, in the Cedar Cottage district of Vancouver, he strung a line to the home of a pal with whom he was to practice. Along that hine, from house to house, their first messages were sent, and slowly their proficiency grew.

In May of 1889 William Tyndall Broderick was accepted as a railroad telegrapher and started work on the Pacific Division of the CPR.

From station to lonely station he plied his trade, perfecting his technique. Over the Rogers Pass summit of Mount Sir Donald, where the mainline of the Canadian Pacific railroad then ran, he worked in the little stations. Receiving and sending the train orders to control the movement of traffic on the single track line he roved as far east as Field, the western approach to the Kicking Horse grade, as the great anows of winter piled up in the passes, and nearly buried the stations.

WILLIAM T. BRODERICK in 1906.

In the spring of 1900 many stories of the wilderness telegraph line to the Yukon were being heard over the wire, and the adventurous blood in my father began to surge faster. The high excitement of his new life among the great mountain peaks and passes began to pall, as something even more challenging caught his attention. He followed the news of how a slashing crew was cutting a swath across the interior of northern B.C., over the mountain ridges and through the heavy forests where the tall trees appeared to meet at their The wire stringers were right behind them, leaving a gleaming strand of bright wire swaying in the breezes, waiting for the current to be sent racing with the first message of the new telegraph line. Then unusually bad weather, hitting the north country with fury, forced a halt to the construction late in the fall of 1900.

The apring of 1901 saw a resumption of work, however, and all through that summer my father listened to the tales of its progress as he sat at his key and sounder in a station on the Rogers Pass summit. Then, on September 24, 1901, the great Yukon Telegraph was finally a reality when the wire from north and south was spliced at a point north of Hazekon, B.C. The epic undertaking had been completed and the miners on the Yukon River and its tributaries were at lest limed with the outside. Over the new line through the wilderness orders for supplier could be sent. Equipment could be obtained by the next steamer, with a message sent along the wire. The Mounted Police could report to their outside superiors, by the new method, and the me-

Trained Men Wanted

But before the line began its work of carrying the messages personnel would have to be installed in all the little cabins, along the whole 1,826 miles of its length. The linemen and operators would have to be there for the job of maintenance and repair.

Down from the high mountains came my father, his resignation to the CPR being tendered on November 21, 1901. On December 1, 1901, he was accepted as operator by the Yukon Telegraph Service, and again boarded a Canadian Pacific train, travelling on a travel permit from the department of public works of Canada—his new employer.

Leaving the train at Ashcroft he was directed to the office of a well-known packer and freighter, a colorful figure of the Carlhoo country, Cataline. From Ashcroft one of Cataline's freight wagons took him north to Quesnel, where the freight road swung eastward to Barkerville. From Quesnel on it would be by dog team and snowshoe to the lonely cabin to which he had been assigned.

The December snow by deep in the bush and the temperature was around 20 below as a dog team heavily laden with supplies left Quernel and swung down the cutiline through the forest. Straight as a chalkline it ran across the country, and as the Indian guide and packers hurried their dogs up the trail the young white man in the party gazed eagerly at the bright strand of new wire that looped from tree to tree up the middle of the slashed right-of-way. My father was eager and happy that morning, and he often told me what a thrill of anticipation he felt as he swung along on strong legs behind the dog sied. He was on the final lap of a journey that would take him to his wilderness post, in one of the maintenance cabins of the Yukon Telegraph. He had been assigned to a cabin about 160 miles north of Quesnel, and the journey would be on snowshoes, all the way.

Early Camp

Late in the afternoon of the final day on the trail the Indian packers started to make camp early. They had made good progress hat day and my father had hopefully looked forward to the journey's end. With the signs of camp-making his spirits fell, and he approached the Indian cuide.

proached the Indian guide.

"We go no farther today?" my father asked, with disappointment in his voice. "How far yet to the cabin?"

"A short day's journey," the Indian replied.
"We camp here tonight, and tomorrow early we reach the cabin."

My father was impatient to go on, and felt distante at the prospects of another night on the trail.

"How far?" he asked the Indian guide.
"How many miles to the cabin?"

STURDY WALLS still standing, the telegraphist's cabin at Bobtail Lake.

The guide replied. "Mmm—maybe twenty mile."

"Twenty milm!" my father exclaimed.
"Here, you bring my pack. I'll take my rifle and go on."

"Go on?" the guide asked. "Without rest? Way?"

My father had just passed his 26th birthday, and he was in good physical condition. He was a small statured man, but lithe and spare.

To the Indian guide he said: "I want to get there before tomorrow. I have promised myself I will open my key on this job in the morning and report ready for duty. Yes, I will go on by myself."

The old Indian looked at him keenly, then said. "Very well, you go on. I think you make it." He walked away shaking his shaggy head and muttering.

Lonely Journey

How my father struck an Indian jog-tret up the telegraph trail through the trees in vivid to me from his telling. He had mastered the gait, and I know how one can keep it up for hours, for I myself became adept at the mode of travel as a boy. He told me he never once broke his gait in the twenty miles, and arrived at the lonely cabin in the bush still going strong.

From December, 1901, until the spring of 1902 my father worked in a cabin above Burns Lake. That was the first year the complete line was in operation, and the number of cabins manned proved to be imadequate. It was found measure to shorten the territory of some of the operator-lineman crews by putting cabins in between.

Copies of department of public works reports, obtained through the co-operation of Kaye Lamb, Demision archivist, show that there were very few cabins the first winter. It shows only one cabin, that of Blackwater, between Quemei and Fraser Lake. In the report for December, 1902, however, it lists Bobtall Lake, with W. T. Broderick as operator and A. McDonald on Kneman.

According to the stories my father told me there was a cabin of sorts at Bobtail Lake, intended only as an overnight stopping place while on line patrol. He was sent to Bobtail Lake in the spring of 1902 as operator of the new maintenance cabin. I remember him using the name Alex when speaking of one of his linemen, so it was probably A. McDonald shown in the report. The miserable hovel at Bobtail Lake was an impossible abode, so the two men decided to build a new one. By wire they were supplied with department specifications and plans for its construction.

My father, of pioneering stock, was familiar with log cabin construction, and one of my childhood memories of him is the ability he had with his hands, and his interest in building. In his lifetime he built many things, buildings, furniture, toys and even small bridges. It is not surprising to me that he would think of undertaking the task of building a cable in the wilderness. In my minding a cable to the patient similaring touches he would lavish on it. He loved to build, and everything he built was solid and practical.

The actual construction was described to me bit by bit, as incidents or remarks would remaind him of it. From somewhere they acquired a whipsaw, and with it sawed the boards used for the door and window castags. To use the wiripsaw they dug a pit, and over it constructed a platform where the man on the top of the saw stooi. Then, with the log firmly anchored on the ground, one man in the pit, each to an end of the long rip saw they slowly and laboriously sawed down the length of the log to make one board after another. Each board was an achievement, and precious in that isolated land. It is unfortunate that the door of that little cabin has disapposred, for the lumber of which it was constructed represented long hours of hard work by my father and his partner on the other end of the saw. But the window and door casings are still intact, as is part of the floor they laid.

Sound Floor

They made the floor of what was known as "puncheous." Straight trees were cut, two sides were smoothed off, and they were laid as tightly together as possible. Then, with an adze, one of the important tools of early homestenders, the tops were hewed down so as to make a flat surface. That was a great improvement over many cabins which had merely round poles for a floor.

The construction of the roof was described in detail by my father who felt justifiable pride in the fact it never leaked. They first laid a course of round poles as tight as they would go, and covered them with a good layer of heavy clay. Then, as shingles provide the final and watertight surface in modern construction, they used what my father called "scoops." They cut straight clear poplar trees and aswed them to the required length. Then they split them straight down the middle, which gave them two pieces, each with one flat surface. Those pieces were then hollowed out with axe and adue to make open-ended troughs.

They covered the clay roof with their hollowed out "scoops," laying them edge to edge, with the open ends up. Firefly another layer of scoops was placed with the round bottoms up, the hollowed out sides covering the juxtaposed edges of the bottom layer. Bo they made a water-tight roof that lasted for many years. Poplar was chosen for the scoops because of its straight grain, making it easy to split straight down the middle, but unfortunately when it is not cured properly it rots quickly. For that reason the scoops on the roof of the little cabin have gone, but poles.

ment admitting he drove his father to the scene of the killing, figuring it was going to be a bloodless holdup. He drove around a few minutes, heard a shot, then came back to pick up his father at Pursille's gate noticing now his father had two rifles. Later that night, as they headed for Red Deer, young McLean said they headed for Red Deer, young McLean said his father suddenly remembered the empty cartridge shucked out of the Ross rifle after the killing. Too late to go back for it, so they drew to a stop-and the old man threw the Ross rifle into a clump of willows, along with the rest of his ammunition.

Gun Never Found

THOUGH THE GUN was never found, still in the main the story checked with what the police had already learned.

On account of his statement young McLean appeared as a Crown witness at his father's trial, the old man eyeing him impassively as one incriminating admission after another fell from his son's lips.

It was finally toward evening of one of the factors days of mid-July, 1933, that a jury found Kenneth McLean guilty and he too stood to hear his doom pronounced.

Asked if he had anything to say, he dryly remarked: "Not much. I'm ready for the rap. I've faced death too often to squeal out of it now." Perhaps there was something in what he said. Stripped for identification on his arrival, jail guards took note of an unbeliev-able number of knife and bullet scars. Seventy-

Later. McLean senior, while awaiting the result of an appeal, made a statement which differed little from that of his son except differed little from that of his son except to stress that his intent was merely to hold up Pursille. However, when the latter saw him lurking in the shadows, he raised his gun and, according to McLean, "we both fired, the reports so close they sounded like one shot." In this way, perhaps, he hoped to parry the evidence of a Crown witness who heard one

Kenneth Had Courage

DESPITE his undeniably brutal and murderous nature, this much could be said for Kenneth McLean. Though his son tried to claw his way back from the grave by placing all blame on his father, the old man did his best to absolve his son from complicity. But then of course he had but a vague idea of what Canadian law meant by "accomplice."

That young William hadn't given up hope of escape when he crossed the border was evidenced in a jail search when a couple of thin saws were discovered in his coat lining. His Aunt Martha Sharp had smuggled four of these into his Knoxville cell, and two he used to make a break that netted him only a couple of days' liberty. Now, in Alberta, the other two were discovered, as well as a handcuff key in the knot of his tie.

A lot of assorted McLeans and Sharps had come up for the trial, and it was 17-year-old Willard, William's brother, who one day posseased himself of a revolver and some shells before journeying from Saskatchewan to visit his brother in the Alberta jail. An observant Saskatchewan policeman, however, though he didn't know about the gun, noted the purchase of ammunition and sent word ahead. Willard was deprived of his "do it yourself" kit at the

The McLeans' Alberta appeal was turned down, as was another to the Supreme Court of Canada, and finally at the unusual hour of half past three in the morning of Nov. 24, 1933. thirteen months after their crime, father and son walked calmly to the gallows. Willie went first; his father followed.

As I have mentioned, we have with us to-day in Victoria a man closely associated with the famous case—Henry Brace. Not only was his ballistic evidence of vital importance, but it was also the subject of very favorable com-ment by Mr. Justice Tweedie.

Brace's Notes

IT WAS while going over his notes recently that I was struck by the different outlook on law enforcement in Tennessee and Alberta; one angle in particular gave fresh awareness as to what law enforcement really means.

Considering the Manville murder occurred in a depression year, a year when 67,000 un-employed shuffled the streets of Vancouver, and uncounted other thousands rode boxcars in search of work, it seemed somehow incongruous that the Alberta government should spend close to $50,000 to find two men who murdered a farmer. Was it worth it?

From among his file of letters and papers, Henry Brace, I think, produced the answer.

Remember Mr. Baker, the Huntsville hard-ware man, who told Russill about the man who ordered the .250/3000 shells, a man who never picked them up?

Baker was a witness at the trial, and while in Alberta he and his wife were shown some courtenies by the Braces. Naturally he dropped them a "thank you" letter when he got back home, describing in part their return through Glacier and Yellowstone Parks, then finally added this bit of hometown news:

" ... we have had some aftermath to that jail delivery in which two prisoners were taken from the jail here by a small mob and killed. Sheriff Winningham of Clinton County, Kentucky, was killed in a gunfight last Saturday night and his deputies then killed the man who got him. That makes ten men who have been killed near here in the past three months due directly to the killings that these two prisoners did, that started it all. Six have been officers and four other people and frankly I think there will be more of it soon and maybe right here in our own little town .

If our system is at times a little expensive, the alternative can be rougher than paying taxes!

THE LITTLE CABIN ON BOBTAIL LAKE

and layer of clay remain, reminders of the

From the little cabin on the shores of Bobtail Lake (now Lake Naltesby) my father and Alex McDonald patrolled the stretch of wire north and south. The operators were provided with a portable set of key and sounder which they could out in to the line at specified points where a wire led down to a low pole. That way they could test the line, and report on its con-dition to the next cabin. The two men had the responsibility of keeping the messages flowing north and south regardless of weather, snow, flood, wind or freezing rain. Heavy snows would cause the line to break. Floods would take out poles, and rain would often ground, the wire, short circuiting the current. As a team they worked, the operator patrolling with his portable sending and receiving set, the lineman splicing and repairing.

In the cabin there was a set of bluestone and copper batteries. Sometimes grounding conditions would so weaken the current that the messages could not get by their cabin.

Then my father would ground his end of the wire, cutting it off at that point. He would receive the messages as they came to him and copy them. Then, hooking in to his batteries he would transmit to the next cabin, where the operator would do likewise if the current was still too weak. They called that method "repeating.

Until the beginning of 1904 my father lived in that cabin, and worked the stretch of wire under his charge. He saved his wages, and augmented them with trapping on the side, so that he had a pretty good stake to come out with. Sometime in his years as operator he had decided upon pharmacy as a profession, and his plans were to use his accumulated savings for his course. On January 21, 1904, he resigned from the Yukon Telegraph Service, and his place at Bobtail Lake was taken, ac-cording to the department reports, by J. W.

In 1904, in the northern Okanagan city of Enderby my father opened the first drug store that thriving community had known, and formed a company with which he was actively associated for three years. He never did become a pharmacist for the big real estate boom hit Vancouver in 1907 and he went on to what he expected to be greener fields. But it was in Enderby, while behind the counter of his drug store that he met a girl named Rosa Bird, she eventually became his wife, and our mother.

The circumstances that took my father into real estate, and out again, and back to the CPR as telegraph operator is a story in itself. He finally retired from the CPR in March, 1944, at the age of 69, and died in 1946 at the home of my sister, Mrs. J. C. Geanacos of Sam Francisco.

The Colonist and The Standard used every superlative they could find in the book. Nothing was too much to may of Vivian. Talk about rave notices! One has never seen

On his first appearance here in 1872 Charles Vivian reopened The-atre Royal. The Colonist said: "THE GREAT VIVIAN . . . gave sketches and songs, during which he song Ten Thousand Miles and 'Moet and Chandon,' with brilliant effect. 'Bingen on Rhine' was retold amid the heartiest burst of laughter that has shaken the theatre for many long day and when Johnny Shaw was sung, the house 'carpe down' literally is one sense and nearly so in another. When Vivian became exhausted the audience ceased to call him out."

Vivian kept getting better and better, night after night. Certainly the rave notions increased: "A large number of the elite of our town, and of our fellow offizers generally, assembled . . . the great Vivian gave "Shahby Genteel" and then he gave the old English gentleman's After Dinner Speech and sang 'For I'm the man that goes the pace although I'm sev-enty-two."

After a three-week engagement here he went away, vowing to re-turn, for he said Victoria audiences were the most warm he had ever encountered. Little more than a year after his first engagement he had returned, to be welcomed Reiffarth received that tribute which Victoria always extends to youth, beauty and talent. Her thrills were delightful, and in the high notes the full compass of her brilliant soprano was displayed to great advantage. Her song was rapturously encored.

"Mr. Vivian, who received an ovation, gave My Old Wife and P in a style that dimmed the sight of more than one person in the audience. When applauded to the echo he sang 'Peter Piper' in a manner that drew tears of hughter) from every eye.

"Then came the great Vivian's olio of songs, sketches, anecdotes,

"What shall we say of it? It is simply indescribable. The extraordinary facility with which this superb actor changes his attire. features, and his voice is marvelous. At one moment he is a rollicking swell; the next, a staid old gentleman, and immediately afterwards a blooming pal. The changes are so rapid and astonishing as to sometimes cause the audience to imagine that more than one man is required to effect them. The applause throughout was tremendous and when the blooming pal' appeared the auditransported with de-

Victoria's high society turned out in full force the night in October of 1873 when Vivian gave a performance to aid Royal Hos-

"The largest audience that has ever gathered between the four walls of a building in this province attended upon Charles Vivian and his company when they tendered a much needed benefit to the Royal Hospital. Every seat was engaged before 4 o'clock; and when the doors were opened many found it difficult to obtain even standing room in a hall that holds

Lieutenant-Governor J. W. Trutch and his family were present, and were received with the National Anthem.

"Just before Vivian the Great's olio the mayor announced that $386.50 had been received at the door, and that 339 tickets were still out, most of which, it was fair to presume, had been sold. His Worship added that the vast as semblage he saw before him was great a compliment to Mr. Vivian as it was a mark of appreciation of the fine work of the hospital.

"In coming forward in olio. Mr. Vivian stated that he felt so indisposed that he feared it would be impossible for him to appear again for some days. He would however,

consult a doctor . . . "
This was most strange, and it started tongues wagging all over Victoria. Whatever was the mat-Some had one explanation. another. However. Vivian come went before the footlights again the next evening, and the rave notices continued.

Vivian had not been to Victoria for two years when citizens gobbled up the latest news about him He had abandoned a wife and child in Landon, and the wife was suing learned the details and gave the story full play: "In May of 1870 he took charge of a troupe of minstreis leaving London for America, promising to send his wife money, and took up his abode in Cjeek's Hotel in Montreal with one of the troupe whom he described as 'very fair and ladylike.' They passed They p under the name of Mr. and Mrs. Vivian, but he wrote to a solicitor in London from San Francisco saying he still had a very great love for his wife, that he had become a staunch teetotaller, with the object of making more money. and that his prospects were very good. He added that he would not interfere with his wife obtaining a divorce if she felt inclined, but that his attachment for her was as strong as ever."

And now to May of 1878 when Victorians were told by The Colonist: "GOING DOWN HILL. Charles Vivian, professionally well known in Victoria, was recently arrested in Philadelphia and sent jail, charged with obtaining hoard for himself and wife at the Great Western Hotel under false pretences

"It was alleged that he engaged board at the place at $15 a week, and said that he would pay for it at the expiration of his engagement at a local concert half, that he brought his trunk with him containing his clothes, and after remaining at the establishment for five weeks he and his wife 'skipped' taking their clothes with them and leaving their board bill unpaid."

It was sad said all those people who still remembered the great performances that Vivian had given here.

The end to this story came in April of 1880: "Death of Charles Vivian - The death of Charles Vivian, the noted actor, at Leadville (Colorado) on March 20 is announced. He established a theatre at that place, but went under financially. He was a wonderful man and made several fortunes in the prosecution of his profession. but spent them all."

Charles Vivian is long gone and long since forgotten, but in his way he added color to the theatre chapter in the story that is Vic-
